The official teaser also teased us with hints on Kim Soo Hyun and Song Ji Hyo's characters. A narrator in a dark-colored suit welcomed us and introduced us to the story. "The viewer is a regular Korean high schooler" was stated by the narrator. "Unlike the previous generation, you are not forced to face a certain future. You get to change your future by yourself!" Here we can see that they are telling a story about the generations. This could mean that the next generation will be the next K-drama. The Heirs premiered on MBC yesterday, Thursday and the ratings were actually quite good. It had 7.6% viewership and 9.6% rating. The episodes will air on a weekly basis and every episode is approximately 40 minutes long. Check out the trailer below! Check out the previous teasers: The first teaser- The second teaser- It is no longer an issue of whether or not Donald Trump will be a president of the United States. The only open question is how bad his presidency will be. Since he has said he plans to build a wall, repeal the Affordable Care Act, de-fund Planned Parenthood, defund the Environmental Protection Agency, and halt immigration from several Muslim-majority countries, it is difficult to imagine how Trump's presidency will be any worse than Barack Obama's. But the gap between what the public wants and what Trump promises to do is widening. The Wall Street Journal/NBC News poll found that 56% of respondents think Trump will "do a worse job of keeping the country safe." A Gallup poll showed that just 34% approved of his job performance as president. What is causing this apparent disconnect between Trump's promises and the public's expectations is a combination of the myth of the presidency and the myth of American exceptionalism. Both the myth of the presidency and the myth of American exceptionalism are fundamentally linked to the idea of the United States as a great nation. The United States is exceptional because its people believe they live in a great nation. While Americans are not perfect, they believe that their nation is superior in many ways and it is this belief that allows them to aspire to greatness. American exceptionalism is not just an American conceit. It is a belief that is shared by a majority of people in other developed nations. The myth of the presidency is also 82157476af
